His brother, Charles H. Osborne, recently found out that Barnes has practically been supporting himself on money furnished by Osborne, who has been ground down to the last cent, at times borrowing money, to finance his alleged friend. his alleged friend.

Charles Osborne recently obtained a note from his brother which Barnes had given him for $5,960 drawn Auhad given him for $5,860 drawn August 20, and payable one month after date at the First National bank of New Haven and signed by E. It was then that Charles Osborne became suspicious that something was not right and but the matter before Prosecuting Attorney Brown, who commenced an investigation, and upon interviewing George Osborne the whole terviewing George Osborne the whole story of the game was brought to light.

About half a bushel of letters written by Barnes were also obtained which showed up the whole transaction as a signatic fraud. The first instance of fleecing Osborne was years stance of fleecing Osborne was years ago when Barnes represented that he had a life insurance policy and that he could not keep the premiums up. He said that if Osborne would let him have the money he would make the latter the beneficiary. Osborne put up the money on this fictitious policy for several years, and when it came due, the "company" feiled and Barnes represented that it would take more due, the "company" feiled and Barnes represented that it would take more money to make the claim good. Finally this was lost, too. Then it was that Barnes represented that he had a patent that he intended to sell. It was necessary to finance this scheme, and if Osborne would put up some cash he was to get back all the money owed him. money owed him.

Many letters were read, all written by Barnes, or which he had written on a typewriter, signed by different men, who always assured the victim that the money on the patent would be paid, and that if Mr. Barnes would come to Philadelphia, New York or Boston the money would be paid there. These trips all took paid there. These trips all took money which Osborne put up, believing in Barnes to the utmost.

Judge Weich bound Barnes over to the December term of the superior criminal court, under $200 bonds.
